

Dear Data

By Zoe McFife

Hi!

I know the assignment was technically to collect data over the next week, but knowing me, I would forget to manually record it most of the time, nor would whatever data I would collect be meaningfully personal.

So I'm using historical data instead.

Dear Data being a way to get insights on someones personality,

I felt music to be a fitting data category for this, since I think music is one of the most personal things!

I collected my listening data over the past year and will pair it with events in my life that affected my music listening habits.

I think it's an interesting insight in how emotions and feelings affect music listening habits.

In terms of data visualization, I think a timeline of this would make for a really pretty graph! Would look interesting mixing in events and feelings with the music.

Of course, this list is also not fully complete. I listen to ... many many more artists. Just look at the total minutes relative to the top 3 totals!

Some Graphs that aren't particularly insightful. I was just curious.

NOTES AND EVENTS

Release of new Scars on Broadway Album. Also the month before uni started. Was a somewhat stressful time, but not much to say here.

Aurelio Voltaire popped up on my personalized radio station and got really hooked. A lot of their songs were pretty emotional too and seeing as Aurelio has 46 hours of listening time, it was a pretty emotional time for me too. Lots of feelings... and stress! Similar thing with Kim Dracula, though this time I had purchased tickets to a concert for next year as well. The top 3 songs are all songs that still make me cry to this day.

The greatest thing a person can share is music. This months music taste was impacted greatly by new friends. Martin introduced me to Vylet Pony- Vylet kinda became my #1 Artist after then. Paul Shapera was introduced by friend Anja who I met during this time. Paul's rock operas were possibly one of the most interesting things I've heard in a while. I guess I just really fell in love with the music and his works. I started listening to girl in red around this time too. Her music helped me process a lot of emotions back then.

January and Febuary experienced strong influence from Vylet Pony and Paul Shapera.

In March I played through Laika: Aged Through Blood. One of the best games I've played in a while and it made me cry so many times. Beicolis music is truly something else. It's been a while since music has touched me this much. Paul Shapera and Vylet Pony are of course, still in the top 3, especially since a new part of the Puppetshade Chronicles came out! April came with a new Vylet Pony mixtape.

In May I found out about the Mechanisms. They're really unique, retelling fairy tales or greek mythology but mixing in science fiction elements.

Deltarune Chapter 5 came out this month. Toby Fox blessed us with more amazing music. The game continues to remain one of the best things to be made. The music always brings me back to simpler times, makes me cry or fills me with hope.

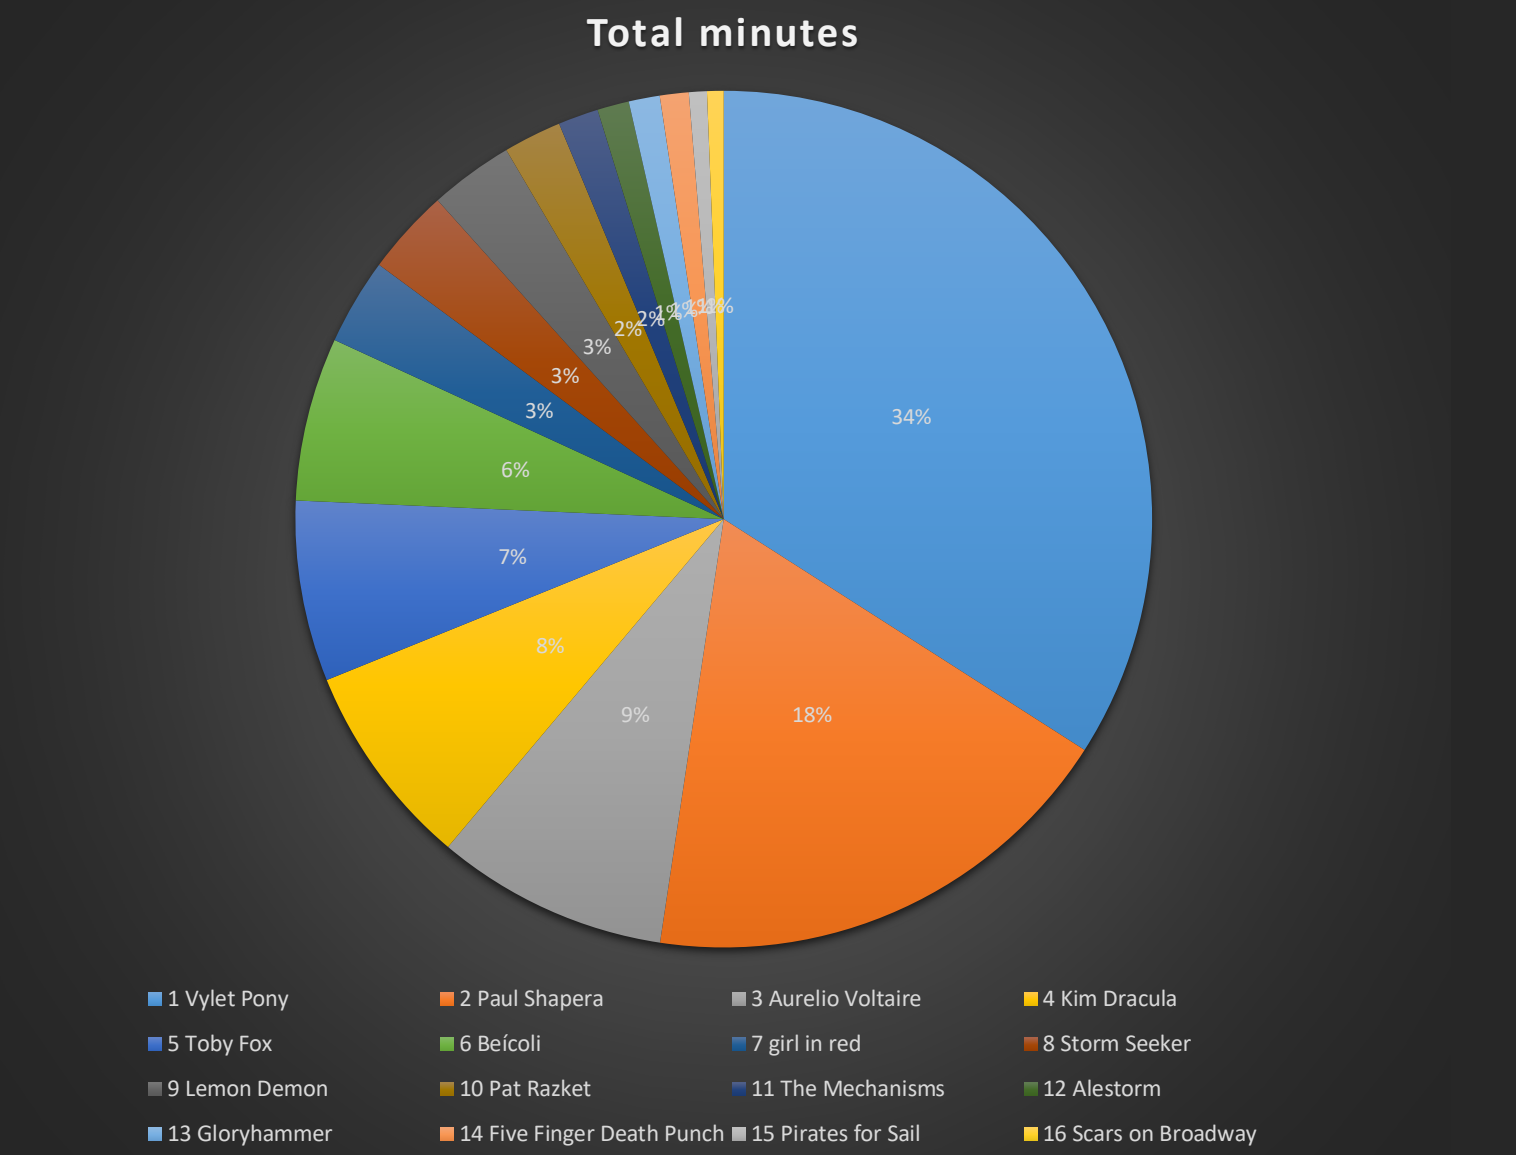

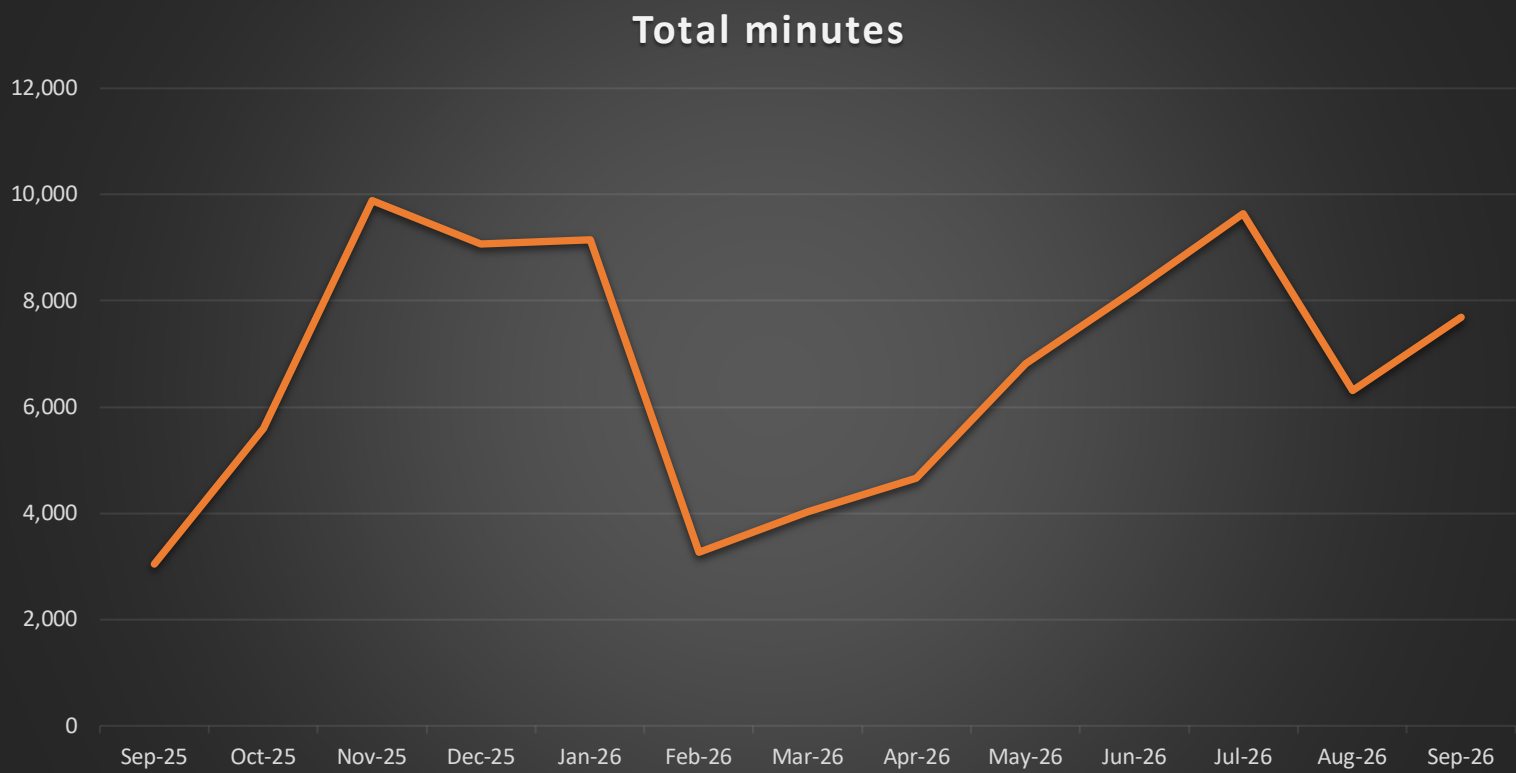

July continues in a similair way and August as well. A new Gloryhammer album being released in october brought them back into the mix more prominently. Also, this is the second time Vylet Pony is fully in my top 3. This summer was filled with a lot of mixed feelings, so some sadder songs got repeated a lot.

September came with part 6 of the Puppetshade Chronicles, so that was what I was mostly listening too. "Steve's Lava Chicken" being my most played song is definitive proof I went insane over the last few months.

While I was a bit vague about some things. This year was filled with new friends, love and heartbreak. I think it's pretty cool how that all affected my music.

I woud've analyzed the top 10 Artists but I think whatever visualization I'd make would become too convoluted.

I'm not sure if I'm missing the mark with this homework. But I appreciate the opportunity to look back and remember. I feel like I don't do this enough.

Fun Fact! I was in the top 100 listeners of Aurelio Voltaire last year!
